Air Force leaders look to the future, honor the past at the AFA

Air Force senior leaders spoke to Airmen, retirees and civilians at the Air Force Association's Air Warfare Symposium Feb. 25-26 in Orland, Fla. Their topics ranged from the state of the Air Force, announcing the LRS-B designation, highlighting the Third Offset Strategy, and the important role Airmen have as the force's greatest asset.

- SecAF: State of the Air Force

- Air Force requested top-line budget of $120.4 billion for fiscal year 2017.
- Strategic investment in innovative and advanced concepts leverages “leap ahead” technologies to maintain our competitive edge over adversaries.
- Investment in multi-role platforms for today's fight and future high threat environments.
- Airmen represent our legacy and our future. Airmen are our secret weapon -- They always were, and always will be.

- CSAF: Air Force update

- Air Force flew about 1.7 million hours last year, which is 195 years of flying, 300,000 of those being combat hours.
- Nearly 22,000 Airmen deployed around the globe every day.
- The Air Force needs to go “back to the basics” with these 10 fundamentals for Airmen.
- Airmen are key – We need to fix where we know we are broken, stabilize, then figure out how to start filling in the holes in our Air Force that have been created by standing up new enterprises while we drew down the Air Force as a whole.

- CMSAF: “Why we Serve”

- The Air Force has seen continuous combat for the past 25 years.
- Since 1991 the Air Force has gone from 134 combat-coded fighter squadrons to 55 and 946,000 active, Guard, Reserve, civilian Airmen down to about 664,000.
- The Air Force's operational tempo has increased since 1991.
- Without Airmen, there is no Air Power.

Air Force asks Airmen to name B-21 LRS-B

Secretary of the Air Force Deborah Lee James announced the Air Force will be taking suggestions from Airmen to help decide the name of the bomber. Airmen -- Active, Guard, Reserve and civilian -- should stay tuned to AF.mil, Commander's Call Topics and Air Force social media accounts for more information on how to submit their ideas.

► TRENDING QUOTE

"I think first of all that for the Department of Defense, data security including encryption is absolutely essential to us. We are for strong encryption. I'm not a believer in backdoors or a single technical approach. I don't think it's realistic," said Secretary of Defense Ashton Carter during his talk on the Apple vs. FBI case in San Francisco on Wednesday.
