

Wright: Airmen need to be 'well trained, well led, resilient'

PRIORITY TOPIC OF THE WEEK

- Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force Kaleth O. Wright addressed the Air Force Association Air Warfare Symposium last week in Orlando.
- "Leadership for me centers on helping us become better at managing our talent."
- Wright insisted training must be the foundation for every Airman.
- He also emphasized having well-equipped Airmen is only half the battle, they also need to be well led.
- "We have to motivate, encourage, inspire. We have to solve problems at the highest level; we are responsible for creating an environment for our Airmen to thrive."
- Wright challenged leaders on every level to ensure Airmen are ready for the fight... wherever that fight might be...teach them to be better Airman...teach them to be better Wingman...teach them to be resilient.
